SPLIT, NAPPA AND GRAIN - WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE?

A hide has different properties depending on what part of the animal it is taken from. The back and shoulders have especially strong hide, while the sides are softer. Prior to processing, the hide is separated into two layers. The outside is called grain or nappa, the inside split.

GRAIN – NAPPA – IS DURABLE, soft, pliant and resistant to moisture. This makes it well suited for assembly gloves, for example, which require high degrees of fingertip sensitivity and comfort.

SPLIT LEATHER has a coarser surface than grain. It also comes in many thicknesses and can withstand heat. Split is therefore well suited for gloves used for heavier work and when a good grip is required.

Leather is strong malleable and flexible, it is also able to absorb moisture, which is why a leather gloves /Garments always feels dry and comfortable , never damp, all leather products are made from selected, carefully tanned hides to achieve the best possible durability and flexibility, they also meet the applicable CE standards for Chrome contacts, Chrome Free gloves are also available for people with allergies.
